THE DISCIPLINE:

The Publishing major is grounded primarily in linguistic analysis, and is focused on applying principles of linguistics, composition, and design in working with authors to optimize communication.

Linguists study language form, language change, language acquisition, and the texts in which language is recorded. Each of these subjects is relevant to the practical task of editing, which is the optimization of language to communicate a specific message in a specific context to serve a specific purpose, and it is the communicative power of language that brings cohesion to all human enterprises.

Editing is just one of many real-world applications of linguistic analysis which also includes translation, information storage/retrieval, lexicography, and language teaching.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES:

Editing students typically go on to careers in book, journal, and magazine publishing, but they can apply editing skills in most professional settings. All professions rely on information.

CAREER STRATEGIES:

BYU editing students find work in a variety of enterprises:

- Freelance working
- Publishing houses
- Businesses and corporations
- Nonprofit organizations such as government agencies, libraries, museums, schools, universities
- Scientific and technical organizations

They edit and publish content in a variety of genres:

- Books
- Magazines
- Scholarly works
- Web content
- Advertising and marketing material
- Technical materials
- Legal case studies and analyses
- Personal and family histories

Students also leverage their editing training to pursue graduate school in a variety of disciplines.
